

Rhythm

Rhythm is a defining quality of Kostas Kartelias's poetic language. The natural cadence of his writing reflects its close relationship with music and spoken expression, allowing the poems to be read with ease while retaining a strong musical presence. This rhythm arises organically from the language itself rather than from rigid formal patterns.

Kartelias's experience as a lyricist is evident in the flow of his verse. Sentences unfold with the pace of conversation, yet they possess an inner musicality that enhances meaning and emotion. The measured movement of words, pauses, and repetitions gives the poems a voice that feels both intimate and memorable, inviting readers to hear as well as to read the text.

The rhythm of Kartelias's poetry therefore serves more than an aesthetic purpose. It reinforces the emotional character of each poem, supports the expression of memory and reflection, and strengthens the connection between poetry, song, and oral tradition. Through its natural cadence, the language remains vivid, expressive, and enduringly human.
