

Performances

The theatrical life of Kostas Kartelias's work continues beyond individual productions. Each performance represents a unique interpretation, shaped by its cast, director, venue, and audience, while contributing to the ongoing history of the texts on stage.

This section of the website is intended to grow over time as additional material becomes available. Future editions will present information about theatrical productions, dramatic adaptations, photographs, programmes, reviews, and archival documents that record the performance history of Kartelias's work. Whenever possible, these resources will be linked to the corresponding texts and accompanied by historical and artistic notes.

By preserving this material, the website aims to document the evolving relationship between literature and performance. The archive will provide readers, researchers, and theatre practitioners with a richer understanding of how Kartelias's works have been interpreted and shared with audiences across different productions and artistic contexts.
