

Theatre

The relationship between poetry and theatre is an important dimension of the creative work of Kostas Kartelias. While poetry gives voice to reflection and emotion, the stage transforms those qualities into dialogue, movement, and shared experience. Through theatre, literary expression reaches audiences in a dynamic and collaborative form.

Kartelias's theatrical work reflects the same artistic principles that characterize his poetry: respect for language, sensitivity to human experience, and an awareness of cultural memory. Whether through dramatic writing or projects that bring literature into performance, his work demonstrates how the spoken word acquires new meaning when interpreted by actors, directors, and audiences.

This section introduces the theatrical dimension of Kartelias's creative world. It explores the dialogue between poetry and performance, showing how literature can move beyond the written page to become a living artistic event. Together, poetry and theatre reveal complementary expressions of a single creative vision rooted in imagination, communication, and culture.
