

Time

Time is one of the recurring themes in the poetry of Kostas Kartelias. His poems move naturally between past and present, revealing that memory is not confined to what has been lived but continues to shape every new experience. Moments separated by years often meet within a single poem, creating unexpected connections between personal history and contemporary life.

Rather than presenting time as a simple sequence of events, Kartelias explores it as an ongoing dialogue. Childhood speaks to adulthood, earlier generations remain present in everyday life, and remembered places continue to influence the present. Through this fluid movement across time, the poems suggest that the past is never truly absent but remains an active participant in human experience.

This treatment of time gives Kartelias's poetry both emotional depth and narrative richness. Readers are invited to discover how seemingly distant moments illuminate one another, revealing continuity beneath change. Time therefore becomes more than a setting for events; it is a creative force that connects memory, identity, and lived experience into a unified poetic vision.
